[] Contract Interference Undermining			Undermining	There is growing public concern that the Nigerian electoral body, INEC, is not acting with sufficient independence and transparency. Allegations include rigging, manipulation of results, suppression of voter turnout, and most recently, the questionable replacement of the INEC chairman by the current administration. These actions have led to widespread distrust in the system and cast doubt over the legitimacy of recent and future elections.			and legal sareguards that prevent manipulation or executive interference, thereby ensuring free and fair elections.  What Could Go Wrong?  If public trust continues to erode and elections are seen					disillusioned due to reported inconsistencies in INEC's process. Key opposition figures, including Peter Obi, have challenged the outcome, and changes at the leadership level of INEC have further fueled suspicions of government influence. There is no clear accountability or path for reform in place.			1. Surface and consolidate public concerns through the OpenConcerns platform. 2. Collect verifiable experiences and structured feedback on the INEC process. 3. Facilitate expert commentary and legal insight into electoral best practices. 4. Prepare recommendations for INEC reform to be championed by credible politicians. 5. Track and report engagement (number of comments, location, type) to present a people-driven case for reform.
