Please note: From 30th May 2025 Slee Blackwell will no longer be using the DX service

As most people's preferred method of communication is now email, we are not able to acknowledge every one owing to the volume we receive.

Although our lawyers are working from the office, some organisations we deal with are still working from home, and this can result in unavoidable delays in information and documents being received by us.

We can however assure you we are doing our best to progress your matter as quickly as possible within these constraints.

CYBER FRAUD

Cyber fraud is on the increase. A specific threat arises from criminals gaining access to email accounts and in particular emails containing bank details. This enables fraudsters to substitute their own account details so that monies are sent to them rather than the intended recipient. Accordingly we are advising clients not to trust any bank details received by email, including emails that appear to originate from this firm. Please check with us before transferring funds to us to ensure you are using our correct bank details. Similarly it is important that you do not send your bank details to us by email as these could also be intercepted. Slee Blackwell LLP will not be liable for any losses arising from cyber crime of any form.
